Hotels Around the World Share the View From Their Windows for Everyone Stuck at Home

At a time when we're all on the inside looking out, Travel + Leisure's World From a Window series offers a change of scenery, courtesy of some of the world's most beautiful hotels.

You're staying at home and doing your part to halt the spread of coronavirus. Along with many millions of Americans, you're heeding the advice or orders of professionals and officials. But right about now, you might be getting a bit tired of TV, books, cleaning closets, or whatever has been occupying your newfound spare time.

Museums, performers, chefs, and others have generously created tours, classes, and shows for you to watch. Hotels have invited you to look beyond your block by tuning into their webcams to see what's happening out there without you.

You know that eventually the time will come for you to travel again, but in the meantime if looking out your own windows is no longer entertaining, we're sharing window views from hotels around the world to inspire your imagination and maybe even your future travel plans.

Ocean House - Watch Hill, Rhode Island

This window at Ocean House offers an unobstructed view of the Atlantic Ocean at dusk.
